Preface

The Chronicle of Cherkas Global University, 1992–2026 presents a chronological account of the principal events in the institutional history of Cherkas Global University and its predecessor organizations over a 34-year period. The publication is intended to preserve historical evidence of the University's formation and development, its scholarly activities, publishing initiatives, and organizational transformations.

The origins of this history date back to August 1, 1992, when the Military Historical Society “Life Guards Semyonovsky Regiment” was established in Sochi, Russian Federation. Its activities laid the foundations for subsequent initiatives in historical research, scholarly publishing, and the formation of documentary and library collections. Over the following decades, these activities expanded through the establishment of scholarly journals, publishing organizations, research institutions, and international research projects.

Important stages in this development included the establishment of the International Network Center for Fundamental and Applied Research in Sochi in 2014, the transfer of this organization from Sochi, Russian Federation, to Washington, D.C., United States of America, in 2018, and the adoption of the name Cherkas Global University in 2021. The University's subsequent development included its relocation to Texas in 2023, the establishment of archival and museum divisions in 2024, and further transformations in its scholarly, publishing, and administrative activities.

The present Chronicle records events related to the University's institutional development, the publication of scholarly works, the implementation of research initiatives, the organization of scientific conferences, international activities, administrative decisions, and the establishment of structural divisions. Particular attention is given to the history of Cherkas Global University Press, the Open Academic Journals Index, the P. A. Cherkasov Fundamental Library, the Archive of Cherkas Global University, and the Museum of the History of the American Knights Templar.

The publication has been prepared on the basis of organizational and administrative documentation, administrative acts, scholarly publications, archival materials, and other documentary evidence relating to the activities of the University and its predecessors. The chronological principle of presentation is intended to facilitate the identification of significant dates, the reconstruction of stages of institutional development, and further study of the University's history.

As an official publication, the Chronicle serves both as a historical reference work and as a means of preserving the documentary heritage of Cherkas Global University. It is conceived as a continuing project, with subsequent editions incorporating new events, newly identified documentary evidence, and necessary historical clarifications.

Editorial Principles

The Chronicle of Cherkas Global University, 1992–2026 has been prepared as an official chronological record of the principal events in the history of Cherkas Global University and its predecessor organizations. The following editorial principles were applied in compiling and presenting the materials.

1. Chronological Principle

Events are presented in chronological order according to documented dates. Where an exact date is known, the day, month, and year are provided. Where only the month or year could be established, the available chronological information is presented without artificially specifying a date.

2. Historical Continuity

The Chronicle begins on August 1, 1992, the date of the establishment of the Military Historical Society “Life Guards Semyonovsky Regiment.” It covers the subsequent development of scholarly, publishing, and research initiatives associated with the institutional history of Cherkas Global University.

The inclusion of events preceding the establishment of Cherkas Global University under its present name reflects their historical connection with the University's development and does not imply that all predecessor organizations constituted the same legal entity.

3. Principles of Event Selection

The Chronicle includes events of institutional, scholarly, administrative, publishing, archival, educational, and cultural significance. Particular attention is given to:

- The establishment, reorganization, and development of institutions and structural divisions.
- The establishment, publication, and discontinuation of scholarly journals.
- The creation and development of research projects, scholarly publishing activities, and information resources.

- Scientific conferences, research competitions, and other scholarly initiatives.
- Administrative decisions, appointments, and changes in the organization's governance system.
- The development of library, archival, museum, and documentary collections.
- Significant organizational achievements and documented stages of its development.

4. Documentary Basis

Chronological entries are compiled on the basis of organizational and administrative documents, administrative orders, registration certificates, annual reports, archival materials, scholarly publications, and other available documentary sources.

Where necessary, information is clarified through the examination of additional primary sources. The inclusion of an event in the Chronicle presupposes its correspondence with the available documentary evidence rather than an unsupported retrospective interpretation.

5. Names of Organizations and Terminology

The names of institutions, organizations, journals, and structural divisions are reproduced, wherever possible, in the forms corresponding to the historical period under consideration. Changes in names are recorded as separate events when supported by documentary evidence.

The current name, Cherkas Global University, is used when referring to the University in its present organizational form. Historical names are retained when describing earlier periods.

6. Geographical and Administrative Changes

The Chronicle records significant changes in the geographical location, registration, and administrative structure of the organizations concerned. Such changes are distinguished from the establishment of new organizations, renaming, and other institutional transformations.

7. Language and Form of Presentation

The Chronicle is published in English. Historical names and proper names originally appearing in other languages may be retained in their original form or rendered using accepted transliteration.

Chronological entries are presented in a concise, factual style. Interpretative comments are limited to information necessary for understanding the historical context and significance of individual events.

8. Completeness and Subsequent Clarifications

The Chronicle is intended to provide a systematic record of significant events in institutional history; however, it does not claim to provide an exhaustive account of all the organization's activities during the period under consideration.

Subsequent editions may incorporate newly identified documents, corrections of dates, and additional historical information. Such changes are intended to improve the accuracy and completeness of the University's historical documentation.

9. Continuation of the Chronicle

The Chronicle is conceived as a continuing official publication of Cherkas Global University. Subsequent editions may extend its chronological coverage and include new documented events while preserving the historical structure and editorial principles established in the present edition.
